BANGOR WHIG.

SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1839.

¶ The people have been often told of the principles that control the leading men in the loco-foco party; that in their mind the good of the country was a secondary consideration to the good of the party, and the prosperity of the people a minor matter to their own selfish designs. Their practices have long shewn this to be the case, and yet a large portion of the people still believe them honest in their professions of acting with, and composing, in fact, the genuine Republican party. But we are now enabled to strike a little deeper than their practices, and to take a peep at their real opinions when addressed to the ear of the President. The legislative loco-foco convention of Massachusetts, a few weeks since, put forth the following resolve, to which we ask the serious and candid attention of our readers. For the same principles of action, and the same plans that the loco-foco of Massachusetts adopt to bring that State to cringe at the feet of the President, is precisely the same adopted in other States similarly situated, and the same power is made use of to retain States already under the yoke.

Resolved, That this Convention cordially approve and adopt the sentiments expressed by the Legislative Convention of 1830, in their circular letter to the then President of the United States, and in particular, the declaration that "the principle of rotation in office is vitally important, and as much applicable to office-holders of the present time, as at any former period, and would be a quickening power to aid us in our efforts to bring Massachusetts into a support of the principles and measures of the Administration," &c.

This "quickening power" has long been applied to every man who would not bow the knee and become an active partizan, but we confess that we were not quite prepared to find an open declaration of it before the country. But here it is, and we ask the people if they are to follow in the wake of party, and be contented with its liveliness merely, while the managers and wire-pullers labor for the "spoils of victory." The resolve might as well have said in plain English, "Let the President give us, the leaders, good lat-officers, and we will nose these people about and make them support the President to the last inch. Give us, the leaders, the favors and favor of place and money, and we will use them against the people, and grind them down to a more pliable suberviency; we will take good care of you, Mr. President, and sustain the party of which you are the head; give us money, and we can buy you power!"

The people of the United States to be won by the lure of office, and tempted with the lust of power? Never. There is too much honesty of heart in them, and too deep a love of country for this. They may for a season be cheated into the support of bad men, and we think they have been; but this cannot last much longer, and they will spurn the men who attempt to control them by presenting corrupt motives to political action. These leaders would be left "solitary and alone," a gang of hypocritical gamblers, were their true principles seen and understood by the men they now control; and by them sentenced to "the abyss of infamy and confusion, and the labyrinth of ruin."

¶ We have in this city, and we suppose this remark will apply equally well to many other cities and large towns, individuals with good business talents, but who, by the operations of the speculating period, when they thought themselves independent, or in a fair way of being so, have become embarrassed their property in a great measure reduced, and their expectations disappointed, and although they feel at times all the ardour to engage in business, that formerly cheered them onward; yet are rustling out from very inactivity. They look back upon transactions in which they engaged with strong hopes, and which at the time, were fully approved by their most cautious and discreet friends, and seeing the errors now so clearly exposed, lose confidence in themselves, and really think they once overrated their ability. These men fear to enter into business, on account of the old obligations against them, the holders of which are over anxious that they should be paid. So anxious, that it seems to be a consolation to them to keep these men where they are, although without the prospect of their being able to accumulate a dollar, instead of letting them go where their talents would insure them a just remuneration.

Our country presents a field wide enough for the employment of every useful talent; and that man sins against his own nature, who from pride or fear, or any obstacle within his power to remove, suffers his active spirit to corrode with the rust of indolence. Is he indebted, let him lay his case fairly and honorably before his creditor, and do the best and all for that that he can, and if they still hold them with the miser's grasp, let him nobly take the right which the laws and common sense give him, and flinging away every trace of false pride, assume his rights, and resolve to be a freeman. The trial must, we suppose, be a severe one, but strong diseases require strong remedies, and the quicker they are applied the better. The creditor has rights, and they should be sacredly observed, and prudently exercised; but the debtor, poor though he may be, has rights also, and these must not be disregarded. While therefore we could wish that every creditor might get his pay, we cannot bear to see a man standing in the relation of debtor, to debtor and creditor, crushed and ruined his family dependant, and his prospects blighted, by being confined within certain proscribed limits, when we know that he is honest, of honest, & of poor, yet, and brilliancy of talents; that on being known in other lands, might insure happiness and wealth. A word to the wise is sufficient.

¶ The New-York Morning Dispatch is a smart penny paper published daily in that city, and edited by H. Hastings Weld, late editor of the New England Galaxy. Mr. Weld has the talent, and industry, and tact necessary for editing a pert, useful and entertaining paper, and the public seem to know it at the first glance, as we learn his prospects are remarkably brilliant. Well, we like that a good fellow should prosper.

¶ R. M. M. Noah, editor of the New-York Star, urges very strongly upon Christians to unite their efforts towards the restoration of the Jews as the first great step to show what is meant by "the fullness of the Gentiles." He is of opinion that the restoration of this ancient people to their former possessions and government in the Holy Land, will be of great political, commercial, military, scientific, philosophical, moral and religious advantage to the world.

¶ Mr. Menifee Representative in Congress from Kentucky, and Mr. Rencher also a member from North Carolina, both decline a re-election.

¶ The House of Refuge in New York was destroyed by fire on Wednesday morning last. It is supposed the fire was designedly committed by some of the boys.

FROM JAMAICA. We have Jainos papers to the 20th of April. The crops are deficient, especially the sugar crop on account of a lack of laborers. The apprentices were not disposed to labor.

The Fredericksburg Argus says, "We less that the wheat crop in the lower part of the Valley never was more promising.

Fruit Tree Nursery. — We are gratified to learn that a public spirited gentleman in this city, Judge Preston, contemplates planting a nursery of fruit trees of all the varieties of plums, cherries and other smaller kinds, suitable for this section of the country; and we trust that he may also enlarge his plan so as to embrace the different varieties of apples, pears, &c. that are known to succeed well in the State of Maine. The individual alluded to has a fine situation for an establishment of the kind, and we doubt not would in few years reap a handsome profit in addition to conferring a lasting favor on the community.

Gen. Herkirk of Hayden and Judge Goodale of Orrington; several years since commenced nurseries of fruit trees, but the apathy of the public to matters of this kind, while tempted with the greater apparent advantages of other business, left them with but few customers and fewer encouragements to continue the enterprise. But a new and healthful spirit is abroad — farming in its various departments is assuming its proper place, and now a deficiency of fruit trees is found to exist. There are no extensive extensive nurseries in New York and Massachusetts, we know, but we know also that many of the fruits there highly recommended, do not succeed well in Maine, while other varieties are greatly improved on being cultivated here.

Now it is not a very desirable or profitable job, for each man in the community to procure the different varieties, and test their merits for himself; and it becomes therefore, all important, that some person of suitable energy, science and discrimination, should undertake an establishment suited to the wants of our people.

It is not only in families, now, that fruits are found profitable, where, indeed, they are almost indispensable to health and comfort, for late experiments, have proved apples to be an excellent article of food for cattle, sheep, and swine. The ease with which they are raised, and the various uses to which they may be profitably employed, should induce every owner of land, and particularly every farmer to devote a portion of his attention to the cultivation of good fruits. We have thrown out these remarks, in hope of encouraging a laudable enterprise in the establishment of a good nursery in this city, and awakening a more lively interest in the cultivation of fruits throughout the country.

Encourage the Arts. Our citizens have an opportunity presented of supplying themselves, and at a very cheap rate, with a variety of the most beautiful specimens of art, in shape of engravings and paintings ever offered them. They consist of fine line steel plate, Mezzotinto, Aquatinta, and Penograph Engravings and Oil Paintings, in handsome gilt frames. These engravings and paintings were purchased in New-York and were selected with great care. They are open for examination at the bookstore of Mr. Duren, and will be offered for sale there until Wednesday next.

EXHIBITION PAINTINGS. In a few days will be exhibited in this city two sublime paintings CHRIST REJECTED and the CALVARY.

It is the design of these paintings to present to the public the most eventful periods in the life of the Savior of the world, the one representing the trial by the High Priest and Jewish People before Pilate; the other representing a few moments previous to the crucifixion. These paintings contain many hundred figures, represented on a surface of between six and seven hundred feet. Thousands of persons have visited them, and speak favorably of their high moral tendency, in leading the mind to contemplate the scenes they so vividly portray, and with elevated hopes and pious reverence to think of

"Of those holy fields, Over whose acres wail'd those blessed feet, Which eighteen hundred years ago, were nail'd For our advantage, on the bitter cross."

And we have no doubt that our citizens will avail themselves of this opportunity to derive the two-fold pleasure of an examination of a proud work of art and the healthful religious emotions which they afford.

The New-York Dispatch, in alluding to the case we mentioned a few days since of the return of a family who left this Yankee land a year or two since for the "far West," remarks: "The truth is, that those who can go West without making any sacrifice, and who move from densely peopled tracts from which they are crowded out, may succeed better in the prairies than at home. But the farmer who possesses a competence, and has every thing about him to make a contented man happy and cheerful, is foolish to begin the Arab, and wander after he has reached or passed his climacteric. It is for the young and enterprising; the industrious, but poor; or the emigrant from a foreign land, who has no associations here, to follow the high road of emigration beyond the "Father of Waters." But even such must not do it with too high hopes, lest they be woefully disappointed."

Ramrod's Essential Tincture of Gridiron; or, Nature's Grand Restorative. Dr. Simeon Ramrod, by scrupulous and chemical analysis of vegetable substances, has recently discovered that Gridiron contain a subtle, invigorating fluid, sympathetically allied to the nervous or magnetic fluid of the human body, which, being skilfully extracted and properly prepared becomes a specific and infallible remedy, for almost every complaint of mind and body, to which human nature has been subject since the flood. It is found also to have a powerful effect upon the brute creation, and on various inanimate substances; to relief against accidents, to be a wonderful quickener of the circumstances, and to give renovated strength to all muscular exertions; from which it is found useful to persons travelling by sea or land, and to those exposed to extraordinary dangers. To announce the instance, in which Ramrod's Tincture of Gridiron has proved beneficial, would be but to give a detail of all the diseases to which men, women, and children, are subject. The following is but a few out of a thousand and upwards of certificates which have been or may be procured, as a testimony of its efficacy, viz:

The subscriber has long been afflicted with the toothache, to such a degree that nearly all his teeth had been drawn out; and by an unjust scutcheon, he also, unfortunately, had both his ears cut off. On applying a little of the Tincture of Gridiron to his head, his teeth were restored, and his head was instantly supplied with as fine a pair of ears as he could boast of the day he was born. John Earwig.

Not long since, riding on the highway, my horse stumbled and fell, and so lame'd himself as to be unable to proceed. I heard of a phial of the Tincture of Gridiron in the neighbourhood, and suddenly found myself at the end of my journey, without further trouble.

J. Speedwell. Having from my infancy had an uncommon relish for Barbecues, I not long since attended one; and notwithstanding the splendid variety which a sumptuous table afforded, I was unable to eat a mouthful. I took a spoonful of the Tincture of Gridiron, and felt as perfectly satisfied as if I had eaten all on the table.

S. Gormandizer.

Some time ago my house was very much infested with rats; and one day, while I set broad over my misfortunes, a number of them came upon me, and eat me up. I instantly took some of the Tincture of Gridiron, and found myself at ease, and have never been eaten up since.

Jack Rover. Sam Rigadoon.

These were the last words the sailor heard. Springing into the water, he swam rapidly towards the shore, but scarcely was he ten fathoms from the ship ere she blew up with a dreadful explosion.

He was received by the people on the coast, and came to me at head quarters: and it was he who told us of the heroism of young Casabianca. "What should I do in the world?" said the latter to his father, who again urged him to go on shore; you are going to die, and the French Navy has this day dishonored itself."

"This was a noble boy," the Emperor added.

"and his death is more to be regretted, that he would have gone further perhaps than Dugay Trouin and Duquesne," and I am proud when I consider that he was a member of my own family!" (Mem. Dutchess d'Arbrantes.

Tom Tumble. Walking, not long since, near the machinery of a mill, I was caught and carried between two cog-wheels, and every bone in my body broken to pieces. A phial of Ramrod's Tincture of Gridiron being thrown into the pond, I found myself restored, and as whole and sound as a roach.

Dick Whitting. Note. Gridiron taken in their natural state, and particularly, taken whole, are, by skilful chemists, deemed extremely dangerous. But the recent discovery of a mode of preparing the Tincture from them, places them in a first rank of valuable plants.

Be aware of Counterfeits. Each bottle is stoppered with a ginlet, and sealed with juniper berries, labelled RAMROD'S TINCTURE OF GRIDIRON to be sold (only) by the subscriber, in Frying-Pan Alley, at the sign of the Tea Kettle, who always subscribes his own name, S. RAMROD.

HOW TO MAKE A SPECULATION. Among the public defalcators in Gordon D. Boyd, late Receiver of a Land Office in Mississippi, in which office he was retained long after the fact of his defalcation was brought abroad. We perceive that his lands, amounting to upwards of 20,000 acres, are advertised for sale, by the U. S. Marshal, in the Mississippi papers, for the purpose of paying his defalcation. But what is the fact? These lands cost a sum amounting to nearly a third for which Boyd is said to be a defaulter, ($80,000); and if they were ever paid for at all, were paid for with the money belonging to the Government, received from other purchasers of lands. They cost him about $25,000, at the minimum price of $125 per acre.

Now, the government has seized upon them, not as its own property, which they are, but as Boyd's, though never paid for, or, paid for with the government's money; and, being chosen spot, and not sold for cash, as government lands are but on 1, 2 and 3 years credit, will it be supposed, command an average of not less than $10 an acre, or $200,000? so that Gordon D. Boyd, by using $25,000 of the public money in buying public lands, will be enabled to pay up his whole defalcation of $80,000, and retire from the field a gainer by the transaction, of $120,000 net! Who wouldnt plunder Uncle Sam, when instead of being thrust into a Penitentiary, as Toby Watkins was, one can get such fat pickings as this? (Lynchburg Virginian.)

MARTINIQUE — The brig Edward arrived here yesterday in twenty days from Martinique. The news that she brings, however, is not of much interest. Affairs in St. Pierre were in a very deplorable condition; sugar had no price, and sales very hard to effect. The people were actively engaged in building wooden houses, to supply the places of those which were destroyed by the recent earthquake. New Orleans Bee May 13.

EXPLORATION TO OREGON. We learn from the Peoria (Illinoian) Register of the 14th instant, that a party of fifteen men, &c. left on the 1st bound for Oregon. Upon reaching the Columbia, the party will proceed to take possession, as American citizens, of the eligible points, and make settlements.

MARTINIQUE — The New-York Dispatch, in alluding to the case we mentioned a few days since of the family who left this Yankee land a year or two since for the "far West," remarks: "The truth is, that those who can go West without making any sacrifice, and who move from densely peopled tracts from which they are crowded out, may succeed better in the prairies than at home. But even such must not do it with too high hopes, lest they be woefully disappointed."

THE HEROIC FRENCH YOUTH. [A story related by Napoleon.] The Orient which a few hours before rode sovereign of the Bay of Aboukir, and contained more than five hundred hundred beings full of life, and health, and energy, was now deserted. For all who escaped the hostile ball and dread splinter, had sought their safety by jumping into the sea and swimming to the shore. One man alone remained unshaken upon the deck, and with his arms crossed upon his broad chest, and his face covered with blood and smoke, stood contemplating, with an eye of deep sorrow, another individual, who still breathed, but who was seated at the foot of the mainmast, with both his legs shattered, and the blood streaming from the numerous wounds he had received. He was sinking into eternity without uttering a single complaint; on the contrary, he thanked his Creator for withdrawing him from the world. His eyes were raised to hold the flag of republican France waving once more over his head. A few paces from the dying man stood a youth about fourteen, dressed in plain clothes, with a dirk by his side, and a brace of pistols in his belt. He looked at the wounded man with a countenance expressive of the most profound grief, combined, however, with resignation, which indicated that he also was approaching the term of life. The dying man was Casabianca, captain of the flag ship of the Egyptian expedition, and the youth was the captain's son.

"Take this boy," said the captain to the boatswain mate, who had remained with him, and save your lives, you have still time and let me die alone. my race is run."

"Approach me not," said the boy to the sturdy seaman. "Save thyself. As for me, my place is here, and I shall not leave my father."

"My son," said the dying officer, casting upon his boy a look of the tenderest affection, "my dear boy, I command you to go."

At this moment a dreadful crash shook the timbers of the ship, and the flames burst forth on all sides. A frightful explosion already told the fate of one of the victims of this dreadful day, and the same fate awaited the Orient. Already had the planks of the deck begun to kindle; the boatswain's mate was for an instant appalled, and cast a glance of longing toward the shore from which the ship was only about two hundred toises distant. But this feeling so natural to a man desirous of preserving his life lasted only for an instant; and the boatswain's mate resumed his careless air, after another attempt on the captain making a sign to him to seize the youth. But the latter taking one of his pistols, and cocking it, threatened to shoot him if he did not desist.

"It is my duty to remain, and I will remain," he said, "Go thou thy way, and may heaven help thee! Thou hast no time to lose."

"Another crash, which seemed to jar from the hold like a deep groan, made the boatswain's mate again start. He cast a look of horror toward the powder room, which the flames were now about to reach, and in a few seconds perhaps it would be too late. The striping under stood the feelings which that look conveyed, and lying down by his father's side, took the latter in his arms.

"Go now," said he, "and you, my father, bless your son."

These were the last words the sailor heard.

Springing into the water, he swam rapidly towards the shore, but scarcely was he ten fathoms from the ship ere she blew up with a dreadful explosion.

He was received by the people on the coast, and came to me at head quarters: and it was he who told us of the heroism of young Casabianca.
